Cyber Hacks: Avoid Public Wi-Fi At All Costs

Public Wi-Fi networks open users up to numerous cyber-attacks, especially if the network is unsecured. The best way to prevent an attack on a public Wi-Fi network is to never connect to one in the first place, even if it is “secured.”

Typical cyber-attacks on public Wi-Fi include:

- These networks often have an innocent-sounding name such as “Customer Public Wi-Fi” and are unsecured.
- Man-in-the-middle attacks where hackers commandeer a public Wi-Fi network and redirect users, often to a phony login site where their credentials are stolen.
- Wireless sniffer tools that locate unsecured public Wi-Fi networks, analyze their packets, steal data, monitor network activity, or gather intel for use in a future attack.

Follow these practices to stay safe while using public Wi-Fi:

- Always use a VPN to encrypt traffic even when using Wi-Fi at home.
- Disable any remote administration or remote desktop features.
- Disable Wireless when not in use or set it to “Hidden” mode so that people cannot see that it is enabled.
- Always use a strong password and enable two-factor authentication.
- Never access sensitive information like your bank account or credit cards, go shopping, or access any other sites that would expose your sensitive and personal information.

Insights: May is Asian American & Pacific Islander Heritage Month

While the concept of a week or month dedicated to the celebration of specific racial communities isn't new, solidifying May as Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month took over 15 years and came down to the tenacity of one woman, Jeanie Jew.

To learn more about Jeanie and Asian American & Pacific Islander Heritage Month, check out this week's Insights Lesson via MS Teams and the Brink's Proud app!
