Cyber Hacks: Online Romance Scams

Online romance scams prey on vulnerable or lonely people looking to connect with someone, and often take months to develop to the point where money changes hands. The emotional harm to the victim can be even more painful than the monetary loss.

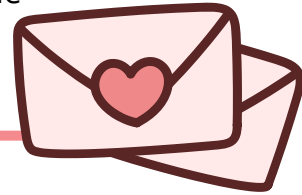

The spread of online dating sites and apps has made this fraud even easier to commit. Victims in the U.S. and Canada have reported losing nearly $1 billion over the last three years, and Better Business Bureau (BBB) estimates there may be more than a million victims in the U.S. alone.

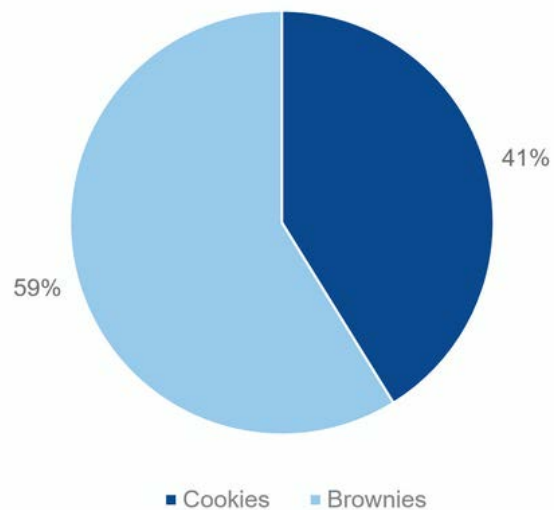

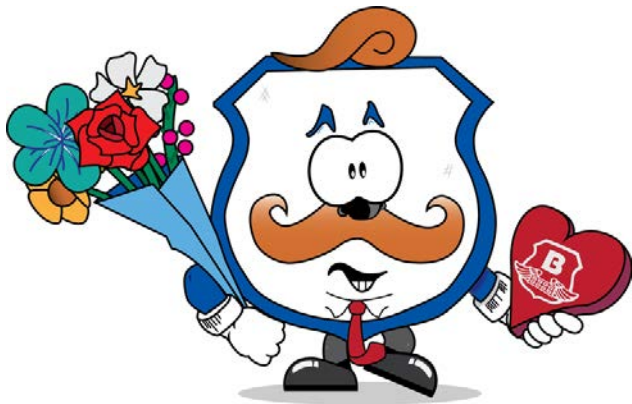

Tips to Avoid Romance Scams:

- Be careful what you post online
- Use reputable websites, although keep in mind that scammers are on these as well
- Research the person's photo and profile
- Ask questions - If a person seems too good to be true, they probably are
- Beware if you are asked for financial information - Do not send money to people you meet online and have never met in person
